PINCHOT HURLS NEW CHARGES AT W. D. B. AINEY

Governor Alleges Utilities Paid Hospital and Traveling Expenses

ALSO INCLUDES PERJURY

Calls Him to Answer Charges
In His Office On August 8th

HARRISBURG, July 26.—Governor Pinchot rocked the Senate last night when he filed sensational new charges against W. D. B. Ainey, chairman of the Public Service Commission of Pennsylvania. The charges were filed by the Governor in a dramatic personal appearance before the legislative body.

With the Senate's own investigation of the allegations that Ainey received $150,000 from T. E. Mitten, late Philadelphia traction magnate, languishing, the Governor put new life into the probe with his additional evidence.

His main charges are:

1. That Ainey has built up a fortune in his 18 years on the utility commission with money from improper sources.

2. That Ainey has permitted public service companies to provide him with services, transportation and favors of various kinds.

3. That Ainey committed perjury in his blanket denial to the original charges made against him, by declaring under oath that he has never been the recipient of any favor or bribe from any person or corporation.

Declaring that Ainey has "sold the public out," the Governor said he would ask the Senate's consent to his immediate removal except for his Public Service law requiring 10 days' notice of a hearing before such action.

He asserted that "the utility rates now in existence in Pennsylvania are in some cases, at least, the results of bribery and corruption," and he recommended a new and sweeping investigation by the Senate into the relationship between the public utilities and the commission and the relations of every member of that commission from about 1924 to the present with public service corporations.

He also recommended that the present investigating committee sit during the Senate's recess and be instructed to subpoena for examination all bank accounts and financial records of all Public Service Commissioners who were members at the time of the transactions charged to Ainey.

In making these suggestions to the Senate, Governor Pinchot called for the most far reaching inquiry into public utility affairs ever launched in this State. Going further, he issues a call to enlist under his banner in a nation-wide war on public utilities.

Backing up his new accusations, the Governor told the Senate that Ainey permitted A. W. Thompson, when president of the Philadelphia Company, Pittsburgh utility, to pay $3073 hospital bills for him at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, and that he also permitted either the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company or the Mitten Management, Inc., to pay his travel expenses for a trip to Europe in the fall of 1927.

Mr. Pinchot informed the Senate that he learned that the aged chairman of the Commission, in period of about five years, made bank deposits of $185,000, of which less than $3000 represented salary.

Declaring his revelations the "most significant event in the long fight for justice to the people from the public utilities," the Governor demanded that the Senate adjournment of the Special Relief Session, now in its fifth week, be postponed until the new charges can be disposed of. He asked that a recess be taken pending a hearing which he will give Ainey in his reception room at 2 p. m., Monday, August 8, and declared that if the Legislature adjourns despite his request, he will reconvene it later to receive his recommendations on the removal of Ainey from office.

Mr. Ainey, because of his physical condition, could not be reached by telephone at his home in Montrose, but his daughter spoke for him.

"There is no statement," she said, when asked whether her father was in receipt of the charges.

"Has he received the charges, or been informed of their nature?" she was asked.

"Yes."

"Have you any statement to make with reference to Governor Pinchot's comment yourself?"

"There is no statement," she reiterated.

It was learned that John P. Connelly, Philadelphia attorney and former City Solicitor, who represented Ainey at the public hearing in the Governor's reception room here on the 11th, was in Harrisburg, and it is assumed that he was conferring relative to action to be taken on the Governor's summons to a second hearing.

BREAK UP GANG

Philadelphia, July 26.—An amazing gang of criminals was believed broken up today with the arrest of nine local men who are said to have confessed to a series of robberies over a period of six months.

Police said the band was divided into three groups, graded according to experience and dexterity in the commission of hold-up. The first group comprised rookies who were entrusted with petty hold-ups, police said. When they had earned reward, they were transferred to the second group. The third group, according to police, was composed of masters who concerned themselves with major hold-ups and tutored those below them until they reached criminal efficiency.

The arrests were made quietly last night by the bandit squad who rounded up the prisoners within several hours.

PENNSYLVANIA SCHOOLS LEAD IN GUIDANCE

Reports Show How State Led in the Development of Guidance in Schools

ALL DONE IN 11 YEARS

HARRISBURG, July 26.—(INS)—How Pennsylvania has taken the lead in the development of guidance in public schools was disclosed in reports submitted today to Dr. James N. Rule, state superintendent of public instruction by the curriculum bureau of the department.

Eleven years ago, Pennsylvania had no organized state guidance program for its public school children, it was pointed out, while today 59 counties have guidance programs under way. More than 800 teachers, representing almost as many secondary schools, have been assigned to definite counseling on an extra-curricular, part, or full-time basis. Twenty-one Pennsylvania colleges and universities now offer general introductory courses in guidance.

Following Pennsylvania's lead in recent years, departments of education in 40 other states have appointed representatives to work with the national committee which has its headquarters in Washington. Nearly half of these states now have some plan or program for state guidance service.

According to Dr. Rule, some of the effects of the guidance program in Pennsylvania public schools have been to keep more students in school for longer periods; make it possible for many more to prepare for college and lend material help to those who have not gone to college; in most cases, by helping boys and girls to find themselves, it has reduced failures to a minimum; and by assistance in the selection of vocations has paid well for the effort expended.

Harold L. Holbrook, assistant director in charge of guidance for the department, has been granted a year's leave of absence for the purpose of teaching in the summer session at the Pennsylvania State College, and to do research work for the next college year at Yale University.

MORRISVILLE COUNCIL MAY ASK FOR LOAN

Borough Considers Applying to R. F. C. for Money
To Build Standpipe

COUNSEL INVESTIGATING

MORRISVILLE, July 26.—Morrisville Common Council is considering making application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan of about $50,000, providing the interest charged is not more than 3 per cent. In order that improvements and changes to the water plant and system can be made as soon as possible, Borough Solicitor J. Lawrence Grim has been asked to look into the matter to learn whether boroughs can borrow from this fund, which was made available a few days ago by the President signing the bill.

Engineers employed by the borough have made a comprehensive study of the conditions of the water plant and the entire system here, and a number of very important and costly improvements have been recommended.

It has been pointed out that one of the first things necessary to improve the supply of water is a large standpipe. Plans for this storage tank were completed last year and bids were advertised for and then laid over. A site for the new tank had been selected, but it was then decided to have another survey made with a view to ascertaining whether the plan of the new tank was the best.

Council has been advised of the immediate necessity of enlarging the two filter beds, the clear well and the settling basin. It has also been reported that the beds cannot be enlarged but additional units will have to be constructed. The clear well will have to be enlarged considerably. It has also been suggested that a change in pumps may be necessary and that new and larger water mains must be placed on North Pennsylvania avenue to Ferry Road and also leading to the new standpipe.

Members of council have been studying the water problem for many months and are now satisfied that immediate steps must be taken. If the money can be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it is believed the new standpipe will be erected and the capacity of the filters and well at the pumping station will be increased. Council, it is believed, will have to have the new standpipe erected soon, even though it is not possible to borrow the money from the Federal Government.

Drawn-Out Meetings Are Order of State Legislature

HARRISBURG, July 26.—Apparent, ly still receptive to new ideas and methods to provide relief for the jobless, after four weeks of legislative wrestling, the Pennsylvania Assembly plodded along today toward a goal cloaked in the same haze that marked the session's opening on June 27th.

Long, drawn-out meetings were the order for this week as the Legislature faced the task of disposing of a huge mass of workings they created for themselves in the form of bills that readjust the whole financial structure of the Commonwealth.

Judge Boyer Officiates at A Marriage Ceremony
In His Office

COUNSEL INVESTIGATING

Because her daughter and son-in-law were the first couple that Judge Calvin S. Boyer ever married, Mrs. Emma J. Arrison, forty-four, who was divorced from her first husband on January 27, 1930, appeared before the Bucks county jurist in his office at the Court House Saturday to be married.

Judge Boyer very willingly consented to officiate at the ceremony when Mrs. Arrison became the bride of Alexander H. Boyd, 57, of Matawan, N. J., a consulting engineer. Mrs. Boyd is a Christian Science practitioner.

Doylestown youngsters staged their own miniature Olympic competition in the Fanny Chapman Memorial Swimming Pool last Saturday afternoon when interesting novelty races and stunts were successfully staged under the direction of Head Instructor William E. Wolfe.

Prizes for the winners were donated by Mr. and Mrs. William R. Mercer, of "Aldie," and Joseph A. Wodock, owner of the Strand Theatre.

Joseph Carr, Hartselle, motored to Yerkes on Saturday afternoon for his coupe which was stolen from in front of the court house in Doylestown on July 7, and which was later found in Charleston, S. C. The machine is said to have been in the possession of John Edgar May, Philadelphia. The Federal Government has issued a warrant for the arrest of John May for transporting stolen goods into another State and he is awaiting a trial by the Federal Jury in South Carolina. A representative of Mr. Carr's insurance company made the trip to Charleston, S. C., for the car where he found it in a good condition. He drove it to a motor company at Yerkes, Pa., where it was overhauled before Mr. Carr received it.

Alterations which will give additional room to the Morrisville American Legion Post will soon be made at the Morrisville Community House. A committee from the Legion has been appointed to receive estimates as to the probable cost.

The change will include the removing of the partition between the Legion room and that which has been used by girls' clubs. A large archway will replace the partition, and one room will be used as a club room and the other for a game room. A radio and probably a pool table will be installed and the quarters made more attractive for the members of the post.

A report was also made that all arrangements had been completed for the Legion carnival which will be held on the grounds adjoining the bank, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, July 28, 29 and 30, and August 4, 5 and 6.

Announcement was made that the Bugle Corps will participate in the parade at Camden on Saturday, August 13, held there in connection with the State convention of New Jersey. Drum Major Harry M. Wilcox also announced that rehearsals for the bugle corps will be held on Monday nights, instead of Thursday nights, at the Community House.

Decree of Martial Law In Germany is Lifted

By Edward L. Deuss
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

BERLIN, July 26.—(INS)—President Von Hindenburg today lifted the decree of martial law imposed upon Berlin and the province of Brandenburg last week.

This action was taken after renewed rioting had developed in Berlin overnight and Gen. Kurt Schleicher had made it known to all the political parties that bayonets and bullets would be used to end any further election disorder in Germany.

The action of lifting the decree of martial law makes little difference in the physical situation of Germany. Chancellor Franz Von Papen remains Commissioner of Prussia. The police throughout the country are officered by the selections of Von Schleicher. The old cabinet of Prussia is out of office.

Programs at Barn Theatre Are Meeting With Success

EDDINGTON, July 26.—The weekly entertainments which are given every Saturday evening at the Logan Barn Theatre, "Sarobia," are meeting with splendid success. Each program seems to attract more people than the previous one. Such was the case at the barn theatre Saturday when a group of amateurs presented two short one-act plays.

The first play, "Postscript," was a trifle difficult to understand unless one followed the action continually, nevertheless Clyde Robinson and Miss Z. Cobalan executed their parts splendidly. The apparent ease of the players seemed to carry the audience with them.

The second play was a light and humorous comedy which pleased the audience immensely, entitled "The Impertinence of the Creature." Alma MacKenzie played the heaviest part in this play, this young woman seeming to be fitted for parts such as this. Clyde Robinson was also a character in this comedy.

During the intermission William O'Connor, a tenor, rendered a trio of songs numbering, "I Know a Country Garden," "Iris" and "For You Alone." The tentative program for next Saturday is a lecture to be given by a prominent artist and traveler.

The public is invited to these programs and there is no admission charge. A silver offering is asked to defray the cost of advertising.

Told Torture Tale

A story of almost unbelievable cruelty was brought to light when Lena Persiana (above), 12, of Camden, N. J., thin and emaciated, told authorities of how her father bound her legs with chains and made her virtually a slave. For the past two years, the girl says, she has been working from five in the morning until two the following morning, only having time out to go to school. The S.P.C.A. is investigating the case.

TRAVEL CLUB HOME ONCE A SCHOOL HOUSE

Land Once Owned by John
Pemberton Who Conveyed
It to Society of Friends

SCHOOL, 19TH CENTURY

(By "THE STROLLER")

Many people who pass up and down Cedar street have noticed the little stone school house, which stands on the west side of the street, adjoining the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and have wondered why and by whom it was erected.

A century and a half ago all the land on the west side of Cedar street, extending from Mulberry to Walnut street, and 150 feet in depth, was owned by John Pemberton. The Pemberton family, of which Phineas Pemberton was the founder in America, was very prominent in the early settlement of Falls Township and Bucks County. Phineas Pemberton occupied at least four offices in the county, and for nearly a score of years was the central figure in all its local affairs. It was he who was chosen by Anthony Burton and Thomas Brock, the founders of Bristol, to draft the plan and mark the dimensions of the town. There is little doubt that the John Pemberton mentioned as the owner of this lot was a descendant of Phineas Pemberton.

The Society of Friends were the early pioneers in education in this locality. Records are extant which show that the Friends conducted a school in their Meeting House at the corner of Wood and Market streets back in the eighteenth century. This school, like all other Friends' schools, was open to all who could pay the tuition fee. It was probably due to the existence of this school and his interest as a Friend in the advancement of education that John Pemberton, in 1793, conveyed to the trustees of the Bristol Preparative Meeting the upper portion of this lot, upon which to erect a school building. The deed contains the names of William Bidgood, Phineas Buckley, Samuel Allen, Thomas Blakely, trustees. The lot was deeded to them in special trust, for the use and benefit of a school in the Borough of Bristol, to be under the care and direction of the Friends of Bristol.

Phineas Buckley, who is mentioned in the conveyance, was a very prominent citizen in his day. He resided in the mansion which stood on the site of the present homes of Dr. James Collins and the late Miss Nesbit. This was the house to which Lafayette was taken after being wounded at the Battle of Brandywine. It was Phineas Buckley's two maiden daughters who started the first Sunday School in Bristol in 1811. The Buckley plot extended from a point near Walnut street up Radcliffe to a short distance above Penn street, and inland from the river a distance of five hundred feet. Part of this plot was purchased by Capt. Joseph B. Hutchinson, the previous owner, and added to the lot now occupied by the home of Joseph R. Grundy. Penn street was cut through this Buckley plot.

Following the deeding of this land to the Society of Friends for school purposes, the State began to evince some interest in education, and after the opening of the new century, a law was passed which compelled the various towns and communities to open free schools for the education of the children of the poor. The old records of the Borough show that such a school was opened in the old Court House on Cedar street. As the years passed, the thought imbedded itself into the minds of many of the citizens of the Commonwealth that a system of public education could be devised that would extend its privileges to both the rich and poor alike, and thus wipe out the line between the rich and the poor.

HE SPURNED A KINGSHIP

Impetuosity and plain speaking get many persons into deep water, but to George Fred Williams, who recently died in Brookline, Mass., they brought distinction, if not immortal fame.

Old newspaper readers will remember "George Fred," "the original mugwump" and "the man who would not be king." These appellations came to him during the pre-war days, which were eventful but quickly overshadowed by the more eventful years that followed.

William Jennings Bryan, out of friendship, obtained Williams' appointment as minister to Greece. While administering that office he expressed too freely and publicly his true feelings toward the reigning monarch of Albania with the result that Washington recalled him. When Albanian chiefs, who shared Williams' opinion of their monarch, learned of his recall they invited the discredited minister to form a government and occupy the throne in their country. Williams politely refused for the good reason that the country was broke.

During the World War "George Fred" returned to the United States and executed another political flop, returning to the Republican party which he had repudiated in the Blaine campaign. He belongs to that company of political soldiers of fortune and to that smaller company of men and women who dare speak out of turn.

HABIT

Man is a creature of habit. Traditions and customs are strong upon him. The average person finds that it is as difficult to cast off an old custom as to escape from man's hereditary superstitions.

What is the reason for the row of buttons on the cuffs of a man's coat? Ornamentation? No! They are there because two centuries ago men wore sleeves so tight they had to be unbuttoned at the cuffs to be removed. The tight cuff went out of style, but custom dictated the retention of the buttons.

The first steamships had masts because in those days a ship without a mast was not a ship. For the same reasons of custom and habit the new motor ships of today are being built with funnels, although they make no smoke.

Great Britain's largest motor ship, the Britannic, has two funnels. One houses escape pipes, ventilators and various odds and ends of machinery. The other? The other has been made into a smoking room for the engineers. And so the smoke goes up the chimney just the same.

The designers say the public demands the funnels; it refuses to sail on a vessel without a smoke-stack. People are so accustomed to seeing funnels on liners that they have become a fashion; just like the buttons on sleeves.

The proper measure of a man is the size of those he brags about knowing.

Never yet have men built a civilization with the slogan: "Let the Government do it."

You needn't travel to get change of scenery. The billboards at home are changed at intervals.

"MURDER of the NIGHT CLUB LADY"

THE NEW THATCHER COLT DETECTIVE MYSTERY

BY ANTHONY ABBOT

COPYRIGHT, 1931, BY COVICI-FRIEDE INC., DISTRIBUTED BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

SYNOPSIS

Lola Carewe, night club habituée, receives a death threat. New Year's Eve. Previously her dog and parrot were mysteriously killed. District Attorney Merle K. Dougherty suspects Lola of being the "brains" of the jewel thief ring that has baffled the police. Although her husband, Gaylord Gifford, died practically penniless, Lola lives in luxury. Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt places a guard in Lola's penthouse apartment, warning her that she must not be alone in a room at any time. Mrs. Carewe, Lola's mother; Chung the butler, Eunice the maid, and Vincent Rowland, an attorney, are present. In the living room, the Commissioner finds a bag belonging to Christine Quires, Lola's guest. It evidently had been used that night, yet Lola informs Colt that Christine is at the Lion's Paw, a roadhouse, where Lola was to have joined her. Colt is surprised to find Mrs. Carewe's room in strange contrast to the surrounding wealth. Lola's own boudoir is a gaudy contradiction of the living room's elegance. Lola refuses to reveal the identity of the young man whose photograph adorns her dresser. Five minutes before the death threat dead-line of three Lola tells Colt she is going into the guest room for her cigarette case.

CHAPTER EIGHT

"REALLY, Mr. Colt," Lola caroled, suddenly entering into the living-room, and closing the boudoir door behind her, "you mustn't pull such a long face. It isn't worth it. Nothing is, you know."

She laughed—a low humming laugh. Then, walking very near to Colt, she suddenly put her hands on his shoulders and kissed him on the cheek. As he stared at her, too startled to speak, Lola turned and walked toward the guest-room.

"Miss Carewe"—now Colt's voice cracked like a whip—"don't go in there—alone!"

"The deuce with all that!" was Lola's sudden, fierce rejoinder. "I want my cigarette case." Before anyone could stop her, she had entered the guest-room and closed the door.

"Oh, don't excite her, Colt!" begged Vincent Rowland. "She's perfectly safe in there. Nothing can happen to her. Let her calm down!"

At that instant, a woman screamed. It was a harsh cry, choked with horror. The awful sound of it rose to a piercing height and then was throttled off. There was a crash like the fall of a body to the floor. In one instant, Colt's hand was on the knob and he flung back the guest-room door.

On the floor of the guest-chamber lay the body of Lola Carewe. The soft lamps, left on since we were last in the room, bathed her white and lovely face in a warm glow of light. What had happened to her? Was she in a faint—or dead? If dead, from what cause?

While Colt knelt beside her, these riddles sparked like fireworks in his bewildered brain. People came running from other rooms. Suddenly he heard a sound which haunts me even now. From somewhere in the pent-house a clock chimed three brazen strokes.

We were in the presence of a mystery that soon would have a nation by the ears. No wonder that Thatcher Colt was resolved from the first to solve this mystery above all others—this crime committed against all his precautions.

The scene in that guest-room, transformed now into a chamber of fantastic mystery, is graven indelibly on my memory.

Lola Carewe's body was sprawled rigidly on the floor, contorted almost into the form of a question mark. She was still wearing her French flannel bathrobe, tied with a sash and buttoned. Her cloud of black hair was tousled and disarranged. On her pretty face was a livid flush. At the right corner of her lips glistened a spot of blood. The eyes were wide open and fixed in a glaze. She did not seem to be breathing.

Beside the still figure of the woman knelt Thatcher Colt. His face was stern, his black eyes narrowed. His fingers played around Lola's wrist, seeking her pulse. Listening, he laid his ear against her heart. Then, very deliberately, the chief brought his nostrils close to the parted lips and sniffed audibly of her mouth.

We who were watching him could not tell from his manner if indeed he had discovered an odor of poison, the purpose of that last grim action. In stiff attitudes we stood there watching. I was close to Colt; Dougherty was bent over, on the other side of the girl, his red hands spread over his knees, his popping blue eyes fixed on her in bewilderment.

In the doorway suddenly appeared Mrs. Carewe, her features white and pinched with fright against the gray horizon of her hair. She ran forward, fell beside Lola, and kissing her frantically, cried to her to open her eyes. Dougherty led her back to the door. Peeping around the edge of the door was Vincent Rowland. The attorney's eyes were curved slits, and the fingers of one sleek old hand worried at his whiskered chin. Beyond were clustered a group of startled faces—the maid, the butler, and our woman detective.

Colt's voice, crisp, precise, broke the silence.

"This girl seems to be dead. Chung—did Doctor Baldwin say he was coming?"

Before he could reply, Mrs. Carewe, who had insisted on remaining on the threshold, took a quick step back into the room, repeating: "Dr. Baldwin! Why did anyone send for him?"

Still kneeling beside the unmoving figure, Colt looked across at the Chinese butler inquiringly.

"He promised to come at once, Mr. Commissioner! He will be here in three instants."

Then Colt looked at Mrs. Carewe. "Do you object to Baldwin?" he asked.

"What does it matter now? Get a doctor—any doctor—for my poor Lola."

From the other room came the bland and placid voice of Chung. "I supplied the name of Baldwin to the Commissioner, madame. I hope there was no impropriety?"

Without answering, Mrs. Carewe sank into a chair and buried her face in her arms.

Thatcher Colt, still on his knees, sat back and in one calculating glance appraised the posture of the body and its position on the floor.

There being no chalk at hand to make an outline, Colt did the next best thing: by the points in the pattern of the rug he fixed firmly in his mind the exact position of the body. This was the work of two seconds or less. Then Colt slipped his strong arms under the body. Rising easily to his feet he carried his burden to the bed. There he laid her down tenderly and once more fingered her pulse and laid his ear against her heart.

"She is breathing!" he announced in a low voice. "Her pulse, which had seemed to stop, is now quite evident—it is getting stronger every second—almost too strong! Why doesn't that doctor get here?"

It was like watching a dreadful resurrection. The rigid form of the mysteriously stricken girl became mobile before our eyes. Spasms and convulsions shook the entire body and croup-like sounds came from her throat. Clearly, once or twice, so it seemed to me, the swollen lips and tongue tried to speak but failed. Then, just as suddenly, the anguish ended, and the body once more lay silent and inert.

"The pulse is gone again," said Thatcher Colt. "I wonder—"

But he did not finish that melancholy speculation. Moodily he stood looking down on the unfortunate Lola, until the front door-bell sounded in a long-drawn buzzing summons. In all his unbent height, Colt faced the group at the door.

"You will now leave us alone, please," he ordered. "I shall ask that Mrs. Carewe, Mr. Rowland, and Miss Lox remain in Miss Carewe's boudoir. Chung, answer the door, and then stay close by."

Vincent Rowland took the old mother's hand, and with a courtly sympathy led her away. After them trudged Miss Lox and Chung—the butler straight, rigid, and indignantly self-possessed. But hardly for a moment were Colt, Dougherty, and I left alone. At once we heard outside a brief murmur of voices, and then, framed in the doorway, stood the physician, Dr. Hugh Baldwin, an athletic, gray-haired man with young, inquisitive eyes. Colt once compared him to a collier, in his restless and well-mannered strength. In his right hand Doctor Baldwin carried a black medical case. Two long strides brought him to the bedside, as Colt introduced us and explained how we had found the girl and her recent symptoms. Without a word, Doctor Baldwin bent over the quiet form. Like Colt, the physician felt of her wrist and listened at her heart.

"She is still alive," he promptly announced. "But there is just a tiny spark left. We shall see—"

With swift but deliberate movements, Doctor Baldwin opened his bag and drew out a hypodermic syringe and needle from a container filled with alcohol. While we waited in silence, he broke the tip of an ampule which I suppose contained some restorative drug. This dose was drawn up into the syringe. Then, reaching across the body of Lola, the doctor seized the arm farthest away from him. Pushing back the sleeve of her bathrobe, he found a place in the crook of the elbow, and quickly wiped the skin there with a lump of cotton soaked in alcohol. Still in silence, Doctor Baldwin inserted the needle under the skin, apparently in the subcutaneous tissues, and slowly injected the medication.

"Immediately her pulse picks up," he declared, as with his free hand he laid aside the syringe and needle. He was counting pulse-beats meanwhile, his head to one side in an absorbed attitude.

"What is that you have given her?" asked Thatcher Colt.

"Adrenalin."

"So you think it's a heart attack?" inquired Dougherty huskily.

"I fear so. I was formerly Miss Carewe's physician,—she had a history of heart trouble."

Colt's eyes closed. For a moment he remained rigid in thought. Then suddenly flashing open his eyes he demanded:

"You would give a certificate of death due to heart trouble?"

"Certificate of death? She is still alive, sir!"

Doctor Baldwin's glare was bewildered and slightly resentful. He turned and anxiously scrutinized the face of his patient.

"Once her eyelids fluttered," he murmured over his shoulder. "But in the last three minutes—"

He looked around at us solemnly. "I have done all that I dare," he said. "We can only wait now—and hope!"

ENNIS' WILD PITCH CAUSES "HIBS" TO LOSE

BRISTOL TWILIGHT LEAGUE
Result of Last Night
CRESCENTS, 8; A. O. H., 7

(By T. M. Juno)

A wild pitch by "Crook" Ennis caused the Hibernians to lose their third game of the second half of the Bristol Twilight League last night on St. Ann's field as the Crescents emerged with victory by the score of 8-7.

Ennis' wild hurl came with the score tied and two runners on base. The heavy scored "Bill" Ennis with the winners' tally. Previous to this play an error by "Ad" Roe, the other half of the battery enabled the Crescents to tie the score and put the base-runner in the scoring position.

The fray was featured by two big innings. The "Hibbies" had theirs in the first when four tallies crossed the plate. The Crescents' big time came in the fourth when five runs were put across before the side was retired and the score tied.

During the early part of the fray the Hibernians held a five to nothing edge and looked to be sure winners until the rally of the ultimate winners tied the count. The losers again took the lead in the last frame when Thompson walked, stole second, on a passed ball he made third and then counted on a delayed steal.

Joe Mulligan, centerfielder for the "Hibs" was the hitting star of the game, getting two singles and a walk in three trips to the platter. Joe Roe had two singles, a pass and fled out once in four times up.

The winners collected but four hits from the delivery of Ennis and Dougherty. Up until the fatal fourth, Dougherty had held the Crescents hitless. Three hits, two passes and a fielder's choice enabled the Crescents to score the five markers. Ennis was charged with the defeat.

"Dea" Still who hurled the fifth frame for the winners was the winning pitcher.

Tonight on St. Ann's Field, the "Saints," leaders of the second half, will play the Independents. The St. Ann's team won the first meeting of the teams on a forfeited game which was protested but disallowed. At Edgely, Third Ward will furnish the opposition to Edgely.

BENSALEM TOWNSHIP

Bensalem nine journeyed to Bridesburg Sunday and was defeated by the score of 5-2. The game was tight from start to finish and neither team was sure of victory until the final was out. Featured in this game was the pitching of Naylor for Bensalem. He had 12 strike-outs to his credit and had the victors swinging on air. Starring at bat for Bensalem was Joe Blasch who collected three hits out of four times at bat, and scored a run for his team. Bridesburg's big chance came in the eighth when they scored three runs to take advantage of Bensalem's two errors. The next game scheduled for the local boys is with Hulmeville at Hulmeville Wednesday evening.

poor. As the consummation of this thought, our public school system came into existence in 1834.

The providing of educational opportunities by the State lessened the demand upon private schools like those conducted by the Society of Friends, and this was undoubtedly the reason why the erection of a school building upon this lot was delayed.

Eighty years passed and the school lot was still an open commons. In 1874 we find the trustees, whose names at this time were Joshua V. Buckman, Charles T. Iredell, Jonathan Paxson and Anthony Swain, petitioned the Court of Common Pleas for permission to sell the northeasterly part of the lot, and to use the proceeds to build a school house upon the southeasterly part having a seventy-five foot frontage on Cedar street.

The Court after investigation, being of the opinion that the sale would be of interest and advantage to all parties interested, and could be made without injury or prejudice to any Trust, Charity or purpose for which the same is held, decreed a sale of the said real estate. Accordingly the northeasterly section of the lot was sold to Ellwood Doron for $3,000 and the proceeds of sale used by the Society of Friends to erect the school house which is still standing.

Following the completion of the building, school was opened by the Cabeen sisters, who lived at the corner of Radcliffe and Franklin streets, in the home now owned by Dr. George Hussey. The school was discontinued after a few years, and for a period the building was leased to the Public School Board, and operated as a part of our local school system. Today the building is leased by the Bristol Travel Club.

When Ellwood Doron came into possession of the northeastern section of the lot, a well had been dug on the premises which had become quite famous. People for squares away, even as far as Bath street, would come with their pans, buckets and pitchers, and carry home the water from this well. It is said that this well influenced Ellwood Doron in selecting the site for his home, and that he practically built the kitchen of his home around this famous well.
